PURCHASE OF THE RUSSIAN AMERICAN POSSESSIONS. There has been a good deal of complaint

in certain quarters with our Governs account of its purchase of the Russian Possessions. We have defended from time to time this treaty, which conveys to us in our judgment, purchase was clearly defensible, and because it was in point of fact, and on many grounds, important to us to hold this do minion. It has been said that the Czar was right glad to be rid of a territory that was nothing but a bill of expense to him and to his people, and that it yielded no adequate return for the outlay in its be half, which amounted to a burden-noth ing more. The Russian people, it has been said, chuckled in their sleeves at the idea that, in this instance, they have cutwitted the Yankee, with all his accustomed shrewdness. By this treaty they had rid themselves of a cold, unprofitable country, which produced nothing valuable ex cept a few furs, and they were comparatively of no account, insamuch as their cost was such that only a trifling profit was realized upon them in any single Why should they not accept eight or ten millions of dollars-hard moneyand thus rid themselves of what was burden ?

It is very easy to decry a measure of this sort, and to appeal to the prejudices of this people against it. Prejudice is one thing: facts and benefits are quite another thing; and after a little, when prejudice have worn away, and practical re sults showing the benefits and advantage of this purchase to us as a nation, the wonder will then be that anybody should ever have opposed it. the question returns, why did Rus sia sell and why is the Czar and his home subjects glad to get this territory off of their hands? It is supposed that these questions settle the mooted point in the controversy, and that if Russia was glad to free itself of this incumbrance, it was no evidence of wisdom or wise statesmanship on our part to pay a large sum of money for what was of little or no value to them. Now, suppose we admit that it was to the advantage of Russia to sell this dominion, and of course they so be-lieved or they would not have made the conveyance, what, then, does it follow that in our possession Alaska may not be made valuable to the United States? The above reasoning is absurd. Under the operation of the laws of exchange and of trade we have duity demonstrations that what in the hands of one party is comparatively of little worth often turns out to be in other hands a most valuable acquisiton.

But Ithis is the stand-point from which some of our journalists and people look upon this purchase. Let us see how the Russians view it. They do not seem to think that there has been any overreaching in this transaction on either side. They regard it as a fair trade, and one that s its reciprocal advantages, from which each party will derive its due share. The Journal of St. Petersburg has some sensible views upon this subject, which we quote as follows. The Journal says:

"That in looking at the matter some at-tention is to be given to ulterior conse-quences. Considering the matter in all respects this paper says it is a transaction of reciprocal advantage, which will proba-bly result in a profitable reaction upon the by result in a profitable reaction upon the commerce of our (Russian) ports in East-ern Siberia, in giving a new value to pos-sessions which we have not been able to develop according to their worth, and, finally, in assuring protection and ample commercial and p cal interests of the two contracting parties in the Pacific Ocean."

Here, then, in our judgment we have precise statement in respect to the advanages which are to flow to both parties to this treaty.

One single remark more, and we con clude this already too lengthy article. While this country was under the domination of the Russian Government emigration would not flow there. Under our rule it will be quite different. The tide of emigration is tending hitherward in a resistless wave; and there is no point or part of our vast domain that will not be penetrated by our own people, and by the hardy, bold and experienced explorer and pioneer of the Old World who shall come among us.

Detectives were sent in pursuit, and, arriving in New York, ascertained that he had sailed from Quebec for Liverpool under the assumed name of Barry Cornwall. One of the detectives proceeded across the Atlantic, and, after an unsuccessful search in England, returned to Norfolk, and gradually the affair became almost forgotten, while the victims, representing in the aggregate about twenty thousand dollars' worth of experience, seized the Old Dominion printing establishment, the only property Flint left behind, and pocketed the results of its sale. A few weeks ago Flint, tired of his wanderings in the Old World, returned to the States, and, during a visit to New Orleans, he was recognized, and his presence in the city and the details of his crime made known to the proper authorities, who imprisoned him and notified Gov. The National Labor Congress. CHICAGO, August 21—8 o'clock p. m.— The National Labor Congress is still in session in this city, but has accomplished little or no actual business. A draft of s constitution has been presented, mainly taken from Cushing's Manual, but has not been adopted. The only important idea advocated is in the preamble, which reads there.

Acknowledging the good already ac-complished through the national and in-ternational trade organizations, we feel that a perfect union of the whole into one toat a perfect union of the waois into one body cannot but be productive of good, and is utterly necessary before we can expect to compete with the huge monopo-lies now scattered broadcast over our land, compel them to acknowledge the rights of our claims, and have labor meet its just rewards. We admit that capital has its rights as well as labor and are has its rights as well as labor, and are willing to concede to it all that it is entitled to, but at the same time we will oppose with all our energies any encroachments attempted to be made upon labor by it, and strive by all possible means to remove the burdens as are now laboring under. inder. The Political Campaign in Ohio Cincinati, Aug. 26, 10 o'clock p. m.— Hon. Ben. Wade made his first speech of the campaign at Marietta yesterday. It was one of his old-fashioned orations, and he did not introduce any of his Kanasa eccentricities. He said that for thirty years he had advocated the rights of all years he had advocated the rights of all men, without regard to race, color and condition, and that was still the burden of his argument. He declared that Vallan-digham's doctrines are in all respects idea-tical with those of the democratic party in Ohio. Negro suffrage, he argued, is the legitims: "result of republican prin-ciples, and the terms for reconstruction offered the South are both just and gen-erous.

Senator John Sherman also made his Senator John Sherman also made his first speech of the campaign at Canton. He advocated the negro suffrage amendment. A large portion of his argument was devoted to a defence of our national financial system. Our national banks he thinks a great public blessing, and he explained and supported the present system of taxation. He said the failure to collect the whiskey tax is the one great blot on our method of taxation. n our method of taxation
